

[ORGANIC LIGHT EMITTING DISPLAY]

Abstract

An organic light emitting display has a plurality of pixels and an external power line. The external power line diverts into a number of internal power lines connected to the pixels, and the internal power lines are segmented into at least two discontinuous parts. Electric current thereby flows in a smaller amount through the internal power lines to reduce power dissipation.